When I first started collecting succulents, being able to identify them seemed like a nightmare. You've likely found that many places you buy succulents locally don't label the specific genera or species of succulent. Even a specialty store by my house just labels them as eAAA Succulent VarietyAAA or eAAA Cactus VarietyAAA. It didn't bother me initially, but now it drives me crazy! There is enough variation in lighting and water requirements that it is important to know what types of succulents you have. Senecio mandraliscae There are thousands of varieties of succulents and some look quite similar. While it's nice to know 100% what type of succulents you own, getting close enough is what really matters. Over the last few years I've found some great resources for getting help with succulent identification and you'll find them below. Go with whatever method works best for you and try to get at least the genus of your succulent, and the species if possible. You may also be able to get a cultivar name as well. But firstAAA Start with a good photo You'll always need a good photo to ID your succulent (unless you are asking someone in person). Try to photograph the plant on its own rather than in an arrangement. If it is in an arrangement, try to crop or zoom in so that only the plant in question is visible. However, make sure you can see enough of the plant that people can identify it. If your plant is in bloom it's generally even easier for people to ID it. Be sure to capture a separate picture of the flowers or include it in the main photo if you can. You don't have to have the photo of the bloom, but for specific species it makes A little easier. Make sure the succulent is well lit. If you are photographing in a dark area or sometimes inside, you can get an extraAAo color mold that can make the color of the plant look different. The moral of the story is to get the best possible picture of your succulent. The better the image, the more likely it is that people will be able to identify the plant. Facebook groups I love to post my photos to Facebook groups to get IDs. I'm usually able to get an answer in a few minutes. It's also fun to be part of a succulent group! I found that people in Facebook groups are more likely to give you comments or advice than members of a forum. Here are a couple of groups you can apply to join: Fanatics Succulent INFATUATION Succulents and MAS! Always be sure to thank people who have responded with suggestions! Being interactive in these groups is also highly recommended. In general, people like to help those who are interacting with them or who are involved in that community. to the club of succulent lovers! As you know, I firmly believe you should know the names of the succulents you own. Therefore, as part of the succulent lovers club there is a section where you can upload your photo and the team of succulents and sunshine (along with other members of the club) ² identify you. You can post as many photos as you want! Yes, and wait for the answer. We'll do the hard work for you. In addition to getting the names of your succulents, you'll also get an incredible course that teaches you how to help your succulents ³ thrive! You can also upload photos of succulents you need help with and get personalized feedback on how ³ help them. Definitely check out the club for help with their succulent IDs and learn much more! She also has an ebook to identify sempervivums that you can get here. Once you get a name e Á something to keep in mind, once they have given you the name of your plant, make a bust of the images of Google for that name. Look if most of the photos look like your succulent. If they do, impressive! If not, use that name as a starting point. Pretend people if they believe that is that plant or if it could be something different. Young plants can be more differ from identifying that well -established plants, but keep in mind that you may not get a definitive response. There are a lot of different cultivars and hybrids with succulents too. That can cause some confusion with identification. As long as you have at least the right group and a good estimate of the species, it will be on the way to better care for your succulents. I also strongly recommend using the application SUCCULENT TRACKER to record the name of your succulent once you have it. Take a photo and add any other information that you know about the plant. Then use the application to track when you laugh at your succulents so you don't kill them. Then, I would also suggest learning a little more about that succulent variety. I have an electronic book dedicated to helping you learn that succulents you must grow as lived live, you frequently like water (or remember water) and more. Increasing information for more succulents too! All succulents store water in their stems, but the cactus also has small protrusions outside the plant that grow thorns. Cactus require very little care, some only need to be watered every two or three months. All cactus are succulent but not all succulent are cactus. Sharp spines to cactus of animals and birds. They have spongy roots and leaves so that they can sustain the water they get and save it for later. They have to be able to do it because most cactus live in hot dry areas, called deserts.
